Three missing in Myanmar jade mine landslide: Officials

AFP

Yangon, Dec 27: Rescuers in northern Myanmar today said they were confident only a handful of people are missing in a jade mine landslide, refuting local reports that as many as 50 might have been buried. A wall of rocks, mud and debris careered down a hillside on Friday afternoon in Hnakant, Kachin State, the war-torn area that is the epicentre of Myanmar's secretive billion dollar jade industry. More than 100 people were killed in the same area in a landslide last month and locals feared dozens of workers might be buried in the latest accident.

But officials involved in the rescue said they had only been notified of a handful of missing people and have yet to recover any bodies. "Three men have been reported to us as missing," a duty police officer in Hpakant told AFP, asking not to be

"We are not sure whether they were buried in the dump because we haven't found any dead bodies yet."
The state run Global New Light of Myanmar today

reported the same figures.
"Relatives of the three people informed us that three people have not yet returned home since the accident happened," the paper quoted Tin Swe Myint, head of the Hpakant Township Administration Office, as saying. He added that the landslide took place after most workers had finished work and unlike last month's tragedy had not engulfed a row of shanty officer warned it was still too early to say how many have been caught up in the landslide.

"We have no idea how many might be buried there," local officer Thet Zaw Oo told AFP

anmar's shadowy and poorly regulated jade trade is enormously dangerous with landslides a frighteningly common hazard. Those killed are mainly itinerant workers who scratch living picking through the piles of waste left by largescale industrial mining firms in the hope of stumbling across an overlooked hunk of jade that will deliver them from poverty. Myanmar is the source of virtually all of the world's finest jadeite, a near-translucent green stone that is enormously prized in neighbouring China, where it is known as the "stone of

The Hpakant landscape has been turned into a moonscape of environmental destruction as firms use ever-larger diggers to claw the precious stone

Problem of 1949 Annexation of Manipur

In these recent few years, the intelligentsias have started giving their attention, and discussing on the issue that Manipur had forcibly been merged in the year 1949. In addition to it, there has been uninterrupted public curfew on 15 October every year since 1991. According to the official press release issued by the state, Manipur had been merged to India with the willingness of the masses. However, according to the newspapers which reflect the voice of the people, bandh had been organized with the overwhelming participation of the masses. Hindustan Times, a leading national English newspaper, dated 19 April 1993 had on its featured news item titled, "Tact needed to assuage anger in Manipur" stated – "And according to report, it (bandh) was such a success that not a single soul stirred out of the houses." It further added, "The immediate Post-Independence euphoria soon gave way to widespread resentment over the Merger issue." Because of all these reasons, the question surrounding the merger of Manipur remains an inevitable and crucial issue of the land.

On this very issue, three very important and significant questions emerge very clearly. They are: First Question: What is the political status before Manipur became an integral part of India on 15 October 1949?

Second Question : Whether the integration or merger of Manipur to India is right or wrong as per the existing norms and standards of International Law?

Third Ouestion: After the merger of Manipur to India whether there doesn't have any scope for Manipur of regaining its pre-merger political status?

Keeping these three questions in imperative and prime consideration, other corresponding and collaborative issue also emerges. To cite an example-How far, the stand taken by the Government of India that, the issue of Manipur falls within the sovereignty of India, any individuals or country have no right to interfere in the internal affairs of the country, is true?

Let me give my understanding in brief on this very big historical and people's question from the perspective of Manipur nation.

Parameters used in this discussion are briefly mentioned because solution, responses, and stance are taken depending on the appropriateness, and rightness and wrongness of the parameter. Let the first pick be from the wrong stance. It is not possible to unearth the truth if the history of Manipur is perceived from the viewpoint/perspective of British imperialism and inter alia legacy. Why? Because, if the parameter and yardstick set by imperialism are used, possibility of having a perspective that transcends beyond imperialism is very remote and almost ruled out. The case of merger of Manipur should be viewed and perceived from the base that the state of Manipur has historically evolved (continuity of state).

Since 1,100 AD (Sic. 429 AD, Bogeshwar), both the residents of hills and plains has been cohesively under the political constitution in early in early state (Manipur) except for some brief spell of trying and testing difficult times.
