Amu, besides two other houses belong to his brothers were also cindered to ashes. The family member said that still the JAC is suspecting them and because of that their children and family members are facing hardship as they fear unwanted incident while attending school or for other work. He appealed the people to allow them peaceful life until the truth has been found out. The family member also said that if in case they are found involved in the killing of the school master they are ready to accept any kind of punishment awarded by the people.

Suu Kyi lays down law on party discipline to new Myanmar MPs

AFP
Angon, Nov. 28: Aung San Suu Kyi has warned newly minted MPs she will not tolerate poor discipline or wrongdoing, party members said today, as Myanmar's democracy champion began marshalling her opposition for government amid sky-high expectations. Suu Kyi's National League for Democracy party took nearly 80 percent of contested seats in the November 8 election, promising change after decades of corrosive and corrupt army control of the country. But she cannot be president under the junta-scripted constitution. Instead the party leader has vowed to rule from

"above the president" — via a proxy who will be selected by the NLD-dominated legislature in the new year. Observers say the NLD, a party of opposition for 25 years, will struggle to match the soaring hopes of a long-suffering people who crave remedies to the nation's deep economic and social problems. New MPs will also have to learn the nuts and bolts of power and policy making as well as deliver on the party's change narrative. On Saturday NLD lawmakers said Suu Kyi used a party meeting to call for unity and warn newcomers to office that poor discipline or conduct will be punished.

"She doesn't want anyone to build a small building inside the big one," said Thet Thet Khine, an elected NLD MP in Yangon and a prominent party figure. "Any MP who wants to build his or her personal group inside the NLD 'building' will not be accepted," she said. Another new lawmaker said Suu Kyi cautioned the party against "betraying the people" who overwhelmingly shunned the army-backed ruling party at the polls to give the NLD control of both parliamentary houses. "She said she will not tolerate any breach of party regulations... and she will take action under the law if MPs make a mistake," Tun Myint, elected for the lower house from Bahan township in Yangon, told AFP. He said NLD MPs also face a 25 percent salary cut as a gesture to the nation's poor population. Despite public euphoria at the sweeping election win, the military retains a major stake in Myanmar's politics. It has 25 per cent of all parliamentary seats gifted to it by a charter that it penned. But so far it has taken the election result gracefully, pledging to ensure a smooth transition of power to the NLD. The government will not be formed until next year, with a long transition period between elections and the handover of power.

Manipuri Woman activist to attend International meet at US

IT News
Imphal, Nov. 28: Monika Khangembam, Founder of Women and Youth for Peace and Development (WYPD), has been invited to take part in the International Visitor Leadership Program (IVLP), a prestigious professional exchange programme being conducted by the US Department of State to foster professional ties and mutual understanding with other countries. Monika is the only participant from India, among many others from various countries, all of whom have been identified as potential leaders. They will travel to the US this week to meet their professional counterparts and visit US public and private sector organisations related to her project theme 'Women Leaders: Promoting Peace and Security'. The women leaders will be visiting Washington, D.C., New York, Nevada and Florida as part of the programme. The 17-day programme begins on December 2. This initiative supports the U.S. National Action Plan on Women, Peace and Security (2011), which calls for the empowerment of women as equal partners in preventing conflict and building peace in countries threatened and affected by war, violence, and insecurity. It addresses women's leadership opportunities by exploring ways in which they can lead in conflict mediation and community transformation. In addition, this initiative will familiarize participants with strategies for directing positive political, social and economic change in a democratic society. Through meetings, workshops, site visits and roundtable discussions, the participants will examine essential leadership skills needed to balance divergent social demands and interests when confronting political, social, and economic challenges. "I believe the IVLP will be a wonderful opportunity to observe how women leaders and organisations in the United States actively engages in mediating conflicts and disputes arising from political, socio-economic, ethnic, religious, and regional differences. It will also be a great opportunity to meet experts, women leaders and build meaningful networks that I am sure will help me serve my community better," said Monika. According to Monika, her organisation's goal is to make the women of her conflict-torn state aware of their rights and also help them to become economically independent.
