Women activists storm to CM bungalow

IT News
Imphal, Aug 18: Large number of women activists belonging to various civil society organisation including Women Wing of JCILPS, JAC formed against the announcement of Wanted to Kh Ratan, Ima Keithel Apunba Nupi Lup and Chingmee Tammi Apunba Lup tried to storm the official bungalow of Chief Minister Okram Ibobi Singh at around 3.00 pm today. However, a police team who was already present in and around the periphery of CM Bungalow and Raj Bhavan timely intervene and prevented them from proceeding towards the CM Bungalow at Nupai Lal Memorial Complex.

Former convener of Women Wing L. Nganbi while speaking to media persons said that earlier the women activists prepared a mass rally in protest against the arrest of Ratan in a cowardice manner. However, as a mark of respect to the law of the land the women activists simply tried to meet the Chief Minister to question the rationale behind the arrest of Ratan at night midnight when he was allowed to stage protest for 12 hours at keishampat leimajam leikai.

Nganbi further condemn the excess of the police force for firing tear gas shell towards a group of lady activist who were peacefully staging democratic protest.

She further added that the people of the state will not retreat the protest for implementation of an Innew

Line permit system in the state. She also warned the government of drafting a new Bill by modifying the earlier Bill which was rejected.

Later, the police allowed five representatives of the women activists to meet the Chief Minister. But surprisingly as the five women were kept waiting inside the bungalow as Chief Minister was not available at the movement the women representatives came out of the bungalow and joined the other activist in front of Nupi Lal Memorial complex. The women activists further added that they didn't come to relax in the air conditioned room of the Chief Minister but to talk about the issue that is the need of the hour.

Kuki Political Stand and the Way Forward

By PS Haokip
I thank the Kuki Inpi for organising this occasion concerning 'Kuki Political Stand and The Way forward' at this critical juncture in our people's march to deliberate on our political future. I also thank the Inpi for inviting the United People's Front, Kuki Movement For Human Rights, Hmar Inpi, Zomi Council, Paite Tribe Council, Simte Tribe Council, Mizo Peoples Convention, Vaiphei Peoples Council, Mate Tribe Council, including the Kuki National Organisation to this august gathering. I extend personal greetings also to each and everyone who have come to participate on this very important day.

The ideological base of the Kuki National Organisation is 'Zale'n-gam (freedom land). Prior to the British Colonial incursions upon our land, we, the Kuki people, were self-governed under the benign and capable leadership of our Chieftains and enjoyed full freedom over our ancestral territory. By nature an independent people, we were never ruled by any authority other than our noble Chieftains, who reigned over the entire hills of present-day Manipur.

The Kuki people are one of the three main indigenous peoples of Manipur: Naga and Meitei are the other two. The three communities co-existed throughout history. The status quo, however, was altered with the rise of Naga nationalism led by National Socialist Council of Nagaland-Isak and Muivah, and assertion of Meitei hegemony in Manipur by the United National Liberation Front and other valley based insurgent groups.

Cordial relations and mutual respect prevailed between the Meitei Ningthou and the Kuki Chieftains. Neither impinged on either's political authority or territorial integrity. The Meitei Ningthou ruled over his people in Kangleipak, which comprise the valley, not the hills, the fiefdom of Kuki Chieftains. The Kuki Chieftains ruled over Kukis dwelling in the hills in villages similar to Greek-city states.

Both Meitei and Kuki opposed British colonialism to safeguard their respective lands. The Meitei people's resistance culminated with the Khongjom war of 1892. The 'Kuki Rising, 1917-1919'[1] or 'Kuki Rebellion, 1917-1919'[2] was a culmination of prolonged opposition to British imperialism that began from 1777, when Warren

Hastings was Governor General of India. The event manifests the extent our people cherish freedom and self-determination, and the tenacity to preserve those ideals. Today, the fortitude of our forefathers to preserve Kuki freedom and self-rule over our land continues to motivate and define KNO's political aspirations. Our illustrious history is a legacy of our forebears that binds us to our land. Ownership of our traditional lands is therefore indisputable and provides an inalienable right to demand statehood for our people in the name of Kuki. This is why, at the first round of the tripartite political dialogue with Government of India and the state Government of Manipur on 15 June 2016, KNO and United People's Front, based on the resolution passed at the meeting held at Grace Bible College in September 2015 submitted a joint statement entitled 'Outline of Political Demand'. Pitching our demand on the basis of our indisputable heritage of land ownership, the statement inevitably referred to 'statehood for the Kuki people'; it did not, contrary to rumours, make demands for a 'Kuki state'. Identity and land ownership are intrinsically bound. Therefore, omission or denial of our historical identity to make a political demand – an opportunity Government has come up for our people for the first time in sixty-seven years in independent India – would not only be imprudent, but would be downright political suicide. NSCN (IM) and certain elements of the state of Manipur describe our people as foreigners in our own lands. In regard to the infamous Three Bills passed by the Special Session of the Manipur Legislative Assembly in August 2015, the cut off year to identify legitimacy was 1951. However, our people are collectively secured because the Constitution (Scheduled Tribes) Order, Govt of India, dating back to 1951, contains complete Tribes Schedules of the six states in Northeast India: Assam, Meghalaya, Mizoram, Manipur, Nagaland, and Tripura. In all these States the various Kuki clans and groups are collectively recognised as 'Any Kuki Tribes' or 'Kuki'. Later, exceptional to this collectivity, there was an unprecedented development regarding the State of Manipur.
