Popular movements in colonial Manipur, 1891-1947

He along with his close followers first spread the idea of a 'Kabui Raj' which would replace British rule. Youths were given training in the use of arms. Girls also received training under Gaidinliu, lieutenant of Jadonang, who continued the movement during his incarceration and subsequent execution on 29 August, 1931. Jadonang, because of his frequent visits to Cachar was well aware of the Indian National movement and Gandhiji's mass based movement and political ideology. According to Lal Dena, Jadonang and his followers on the patterns of Gandhiji's civil disobedience movement instructed the people to disobey unjust laws and to stop payment of taxes to the government. They so sang in praise of Gandhiji's and his movements as follows:

Kabui/Rongmei - English
Apou Gandhi Pano - Oh! Lord Gandhi

Heigwang lamkhang - Become our king
He pati lcheizo - Come forth
He pati kheizo - Come forth

Jadonang's activities came to the knowledge of authorities. He was arrested and charged with creating social unrest and foretelling the people of establishment of a 'Kabui Raj' replacing the British Raj. As soon as the authorities released him Jadonang started preparations for a struggle against the British. As the movement was about to enter its crucial phase and gain momentum, four Meitei traders were murdered at Kamiron village in the spring of 1930 which misfired the whole game plan of Jadonang and ultimately caused his martyrdom. Though Jadonang was not personally involved in the incident as he was staying at Nungba, the authorities did not let go the opportunity wasted and he was charged for conspiring the murder and later arrested under section 180 of IPC on 19th February, 1931. He was brought and lodged at Imphal Jail on 19th March, 1931. Mr. J.C. Higgins, the political agent who launched the whole operation to arrest Jadonang also acted as the prosecutor and judge, delivered the judgement. Jadonang was found guilty of instigating the murder and sentenced to death with five years rigorous imprisonment, though the evidences proved otherwise. The judgement of the political agent was pronounced at Imphal on 13th May, 1931. The sentence was carried out on the early morning of Saturday, 29th August, 1931. A cursory look at the proceedings of the trial of Jadonang, it could be very easily concluded that the trial is nothing but a mockery of justice and fairplay.

After the execution of Jadonang, his movement was carried forward by Gaidinliu, a young girl of seventeen years old. Her area of operation and revolt was Tamenglong District of Manipur, Naga Hills and North Cachar Hills of Assam. As her movement was gaining strength, the government of Assam launched a centralised operation against Gaidinliu and her people under the direct control of J.P. Mills, Deputy Commissioner of Naga Hills. As a result of the sustained and continued operation she was captured at Pulomi village in the North Cachar Hills on 17th October, 1932. She was brought to Imphal where the political agent Higgins sentenced her to deportation for life in 1933 for rebellion, murder and abetment of murder. Though the movement continued for sometime, it could not sustain longer for want of good leadership. While the hills of Manipur appears remain calm for some time, another movement which have far reaching consequences for the future history of Manipur broke out at the fag end of 1939. Started spontaneously by the women folk of the market due to acute scarcity of rice and escalating costs, the movement came to be known as Anishuba Nupi Lal or Second Women's War which almost paralysed the economic activities of the state for quite sometime and particularly the urban areas of Imphal. It is already mentioned that Manipur was put under the colonial system of indirect rule. This system of indirect rule encouraged the penetration of outsiders in the state, particularly Bengalis, Marwaris and Sikhs, etc. these outside traders were allowed to settle at British reserves in the heart of Imphal and was beyond the jurisdiction of state durbar.

Manipuri rice, because of its high quality and nutritional values are of great demand outside the state. Through the business of rice the Marwari traders in Manipur began to play a crucial role in the economy of the state and almost monopolised the export of rice from the state for quite sometime. The state also earned revenue from the export of rice. However, the volume of export suddenly increased from 105,287 mounds in 1931 it increases 277,389 mounds in 1932. This trend kept on increasing and by 1938 the quantum of export of rice increased to 372,174 mounds. In such unrestrained increase in export of rice there is a distinct possibility of scarcity in case of any natural calamities. And such a scenario actually prevailed in 1939. There was an excessive rainfall during the last week of July and first week of August 1939 and caused extensive damage to standing paddy crops and vegetables. There was also another heavy rainfall in late September and early October. Again in mid November, hailstorm damaged standing crops ready for harvesting. (To be contd.)

Three people were killed and another person injured after floods hit a county in southwest China's Yunnan Province, local authorities said.
