Kohima, Jan 30: The BJP on Monday suspended Kheto Sema and Tsasepi Sangtam, a State vice-president of the party, from its Nagaland unit for offending and signing without authority a resolution by Naga civil society groups demanding that the Assembly elections in the State be put off. Total bandh in Nagaland imminent : State heading for Constitutional crisis

Courtesy: Nagaland Page Kohima, Jan. 30: With the Government of India very unlikely to listen to the call to defer the February 27 State General Election, Naga organisations are likely to adopt tougher measures to stop election activities in the State. Some Naga organisations under the name and style "Core-Committee" has urged the Election Commission of India (ECI) to defer the polls and let the Union Government and the Naga militant groups engaged in the talk hammer out a solution. But observing the ground scenario the ECI is all prepared to conduct the poll, so also the BJP led National Democratic Alliance (NDA) is not in a mood to listen to the call of Naga organisations. The contention of the Centre was that any solution with the Naga militants will be within the ambit of Indian Constitution and that election is a must. Observing the attitude of the Centre, Naga organisations are contemplating to impose total bandh in the state after January 31 in a bid to stop electioneering activities - to stop candidates from filing nominations. But a source said NGOs who are currently having hectic consultations with political parties and militant groups have not taken the final decision, adding "most likely, but not taken decision". With this impending development, the State is heading for a Constitutional crisis. The BJP which has abstained from elections in 1998 is not attending the consultative meetings called by the Core-Committee, which indicates that the party is going ahead with the poll. Again the Core-Committee has convened another round of meeting of political parties and Naga militant groups on Monday at Kohima to further deliberate and chalk out strategies to stop conduct of polls. Except the BJP, other political parties have agreed to abstain from participating in the democratic process if consensus could be reached. The Congress party which defied the call of the NGOs led by the Naga Hoho in 1998 and participated in the election has taken a u-turn this time. If Naga people abstain from the poll this time, it will create another history in the Naga political arena. Naga people first boycotted first Indian General Election held in 1951-52. While some organisations and Naga negotiating parties are determined to boycott the polls, the mood of the majority of people appears different. Many consider the decisions of some Naga organisations as not a collective decision of the Naga people, nor should they claim to be representing the popular voice of the masses. The ground picture speaks in a different way. The popular demand of the people is to reveal the contents of the Framework Agreement signed on August 3, 2015, so that people could support the peace process.
