48 hours cease work strike by Diesel Auto

What Imphal Times team found out is that only some few vendor ladies came to sell their vegetable collected from their locality, but majority who thronged in the Khwairamband keithel sold the vegetable by buying it from whole sellers. And the whole sellers don't depend on Diesel Auto vehicles for transportation of the vegetable but rather depended to mini trucks as the quantity is large.

During the TRPC meeting held on April 25 this year, what has been discussed is to reduce the congestion in Khwairamband Keithel by conducting a survey.

When former Chief Minister Okram Ibobi came to power for the time there were talks about setting up satellite towns in the periphery of the Imphal city. This was with an idea that not only the vegetable traders but all traders of day today required commodities could gathered. Lamphel Supper market shed and the Porompat Supper Market Shed, which has been converted as JNIMS campus was the first to open.

But due to reason best known both failed.

Imphal Times concern now is about the 18,000 plus diesel auto which have been in service to feed their family. As it is known from the two days independent survey conducted by Imphal Times finds that almost all people coming to Khwairamband Keithel is from far away town villages. These vendor ladies not only came to sell vegetable in the Khwairamband Keithel but also to buy vegetables from the whole sellers at Nagamapal and Temporary Market set. If these whole seller vegetable stalls have been provided at the outskirts of the city there is a possibility that the Diesel auto would not have much problem even though they have been ban at certain area from entering the city zone.

Doing that both the diesel auto service providers as well as those buying and selling small quantity of vegetables will have no effect in continuing their business.

The two day data of what had happened to the economy of the Khwairamband market, conditions of the traffic movement will help the government in forming modalities to solve the problem of congestions and pollution.

The Evolution of The Meitei State

The Angom principality lay to the east of the Meiteis. Their capital was at Pureimmba. The Angoms had already established their principality before Pakhangba usurped the throne of Kangle from the Khabas. Pakhangba also overran and devastated the Angom Principality. But unlike the Khabas, the Angoms were not absorbed by the Meiteis. In the sixth century A.D. Sameirang the Meitei King attacked and conquered the Angom by killing Kwakpa Thawanhaba, the Angom king. The principality was not, however, annexed and it continued to preserve its separate identity. In the 16th century Meitei king, Koiremba, removed Loijangamba, the Angom Chief from Chief ship. However Nonginphaba (1523-24), the Meitei king killed by Angom Chief Kiyamba. Such a state of affairs continued till the time of king Charai-Rongba (1696-1709) who finally crushed the Angoms and totally emerged them into the Meitei fold. Charai-Rongba confiscated the white Chong and Shekpin, the white-sozal insignia of the Angom kings. Thereafter the Angom Chiefs appointed by the Meitei kings occupied a very important office in the Chirap Court of the Meiteis. However, all evidences point to the fact that even though the Angoms often rose against the Meiteis and even killed the Meitei king on one occasion or another, they were practically dominated by the Meiteis since very early period of history. This is evident from the fact that on many occasions the Meitei kings exercised their authority over the Angom Chiefs by sending them on expeditions, by removal or reinstatement of the Chief ships, etc. Thus with the vertical integration of the seven salais, who at one time independently ruled in their well-defined principalities, into a single national entity, the evolution of the Meiteis state which was initiated by king Pakhangba, the founder of Ningthouja Salai was completed by his succeeding generations. While the process of assimilation was going on in the Valley, the territorial expansion far beyond the valley and surrounding hills are also affected. Manipur lost her sovereignty in 1891 to the British. But the British however, regranted the state and from 21st August 1891, Manipur became a Suzerain state under the British government. After India became free, Manipur was integrated with the union of India on 15th October, 1949, and with the erstwhile nation state of Manipur was dissolved.
