Warshang Ronra Shimray, 12, of Kamphasom in Ukhrul district came in contact with a live wire on September 2, while P. Ashwin, 9, residing at Moreh in Tengenoupal district, and were nearly electrocuted on August 9. Warshang's father, Mathotmi Shimray, said his son went out to play with his two friends on September 2 and was found unconscious on the newly constructed roof of neighbor Ramngachan Sareo's house.

Warshang, a class VI student, was rushed to the Regional Institute of Medical Sciences (RIMS) in Imphal where doctors told them their son would be discharged after treatment.

The parents are worried that their son might lose his right hand, which touched the wire. Villagers had appealed to the authorities to shift the wires, said a relative. Trucks cannot cross the road in Kamphasom as the wires are dangling at a low height. Warshang's parents said a mason had been electrocuted during the construction of the building. Indian rupee to languish around 70 per dollar a year from now: Reuters poll

Agency
BENGALURU , Sept. 7

India's battered rupee, which has lost more than 12 per cent this year, will hover near record lows on a worsening trade balance and at best only pare some of those losses in the coming 12 months, a Reuters poll found. Extending its losses, the rupee on Thursday breached the level of 72 per dollar for the first time, rattled by trade tension that has hurt most emerging market currencies.

Taken before the record low, the latest Reuters poll of 40 .. While the 12-month consensus was for it to gain 2 per cent, no analyst polled expected it to be where it was in January, with the most optimistic call at 66.10 per dollar in a year. "The recent financial market turmoil has pushed the INR too low," said Hugo Erken, a senior economist at Rabobank. "Admittedly, India is still coping with current account deficits and a relatively large public debt level, but the entire Indian debt is in denominated in INR. "The Indian economy is in much better shape than five years ago. And we still expect one more (interest rate) hike in October. Given all these developments, we expect some strengthening." But a separate Reuters poll of economists showed the Reserve Bank of India was not expected to raise rates until 2019, having done so at a second straight meeting in August.
