Top Jaish bomb maker killed in south Kashmir's overnight operation

Agency Srinagar July 27,

A top commander of Jaish-e Mohammed Munna Lahori was killed on Saturday morning in an overnight gunfight with security forces in south Kashmir's Shopian district. An associate of Munna Lahori, yet to be identified, was also killed in the same operation. "A cordon and search operation was launched jointly by police and security forces in Banday Mohalla Bonbazar area of district Shopian. During the search operation, the hiding militants fired on the search party. The fire was retaliated leading to encounter," a statement issued by police said. Munna Lahori, also known as Bihari, was from Pakistan and is accused of plotting several IED attacks in the south Kashmir region.

The 19-year-old Pakistani national had crossed over to Kashmir from Pakistan last year and is reported to have led the terror group's use of bombs in vehicles, a tactic that could let them carry out attacks without risking their lives Security officials say he had turned into some sort of an expert in making explosives and fitting them in vehicles for maximum impact.

Jaish had also used him to brainwash youngsters in the Kashmir valley and recruit them to the terror group. Security forces had stepped up the intensive search for Munna Lahori after intelligence officials linked a terror attack on a mobile patrol team of the Rashtriya Rifles to the Jaish commander. Two soldiers were killed in this attack in Pulwama, several others including civilians were hurt. The attack had taken place just about 30 km from the location where a suicide bomber had attacked convoy of the Central Reserve Police Force in February this year

Director & Head, Dept. of Gastroenterology & Hepatology, Max Super Speciality hospital, Partparganj. There are 5 types of Hepatitis known as A, B, C, D and E, in which A and E are water borne ad spreads through contaminated food or water then Hepatitis B, C and D are blood borne and at last Hepatitis D causes infection only along with Hepatitis B. The major concern is being focused for Hepatitis B which can spread unknowingly from a mother who is infected to a new born child Over 200% child. Over 90% of new hepatitis B infections occur through mother-to-child transmission and during the early age of childhood. So it is mandatory to test a mother for Hepatitis B during pregnancy and take prevention after positive results. Now the major change has been achieved after introduction of vaccine for Hepatitis B which is a safe, been affordable, and well tested too. The improvement area is visible in the case of Hepatitis B infection is among children group which is being reduced from 4.7% (before introduction of vaccine) to 1.3% in 2015 after introduction of vaccine. It is very much important for everyone to get vaccinated against Hepatitis B as it works as armor around you to protect from this killer viral infection, Added Dr Lahoti.

Mumbai and suburbs continue to receive heavy to very heavy rain

Agency New Delhi July 27,

The Mumbai city and its neighbouring areas continued to receive heavy to very intense rain spells throughout the last night. As many as seventeen incoming flights were diverted and many delayed by up to an hour in Mumbai yesterday evening due to very heavy rain and low visibility.

The heavy downpour also caused water-logging and traffic snarls in several parts of Mumbai and also led to delays in suburban local train services.

Sutirtha, however, couldn't continue the momentum, losing the decider 5-11. But she had garnered two crucial points for U Mumba. Kazakhastan's Kirill Gerassimenko was quick to seize the opportunity, toppling Portugal's Tiago Apolonia (former World No. 13) 2-1 in the Men's Singles. It was a gripping contest, with the young Kirill showing great defensive skills while also unleashing deceptive shots from close to the table. Kirill stayed ahead for most of the opening game although Tiago caught up with him twice at 5-5 and With num twice, at 5-5 and 10-10. But Kirill was cool enough to conjure a backhand winner to pour another point into the team's kitty.

The next game too was close but Kirill managed to streak ahead from 7-7 to pick up a second point for himself and his team. He lost the third game tamely though, setting the stage for Sharath. Sharath and Petrissa Solja
