Only TV anchors are excited about atomic war

Talking Points

Narvijay Yadav

Ukraine, which has become a pawn between the NATO nations, USA and Russia is going through horrific devastation and fear among its people, while the Russian President Vladimir Putin's threat to use nuclear weapons is spreading a wave of concern in the world. No one would ever want the third world war or the use of atomic bombs to take place, except, it seems the TV news channels, whose anchors create unnecessary panic by terming even the micro level updates as a Badi Khabar (a big news). When the anchors of a prominent news channel, while talking to defense experts, repeatedly asked them to comment on the possible atomic bomb attack, a retired army officer reacted calmly that 'please don't talk like this. If the atom bomb goes off, neither we will survive, nor will this show be telecasted. Threatening an atomic bomb is one thing, but using it is another. No matter how powerful a dictator or an angry head of state, he too will be aware of the damage caused by the atomic bombs. If Russia uses nuclear weapons, how do you think Russia will be able to remain untouched by its loss? The country itself will be devastated.'

Russia's special military operation in its neighbouring Ukraine has started to have an adverse effect on international trade. The export and import business with Russia, Ukraine and other European countries is at a standstill. Indian export containers are starting to get affected. The containers which have to go to different countries of Europe or to Russia are stuck in the middle of the way. Due to the war, maritime cargo ships have been diverted or many of them have been cancelled after the war. The containers leaving Punjab carry rice, paper, hand tools, readymade garments, medicines etc. They are sent to Gujarat port through railways. From there the containers are transported to different countries through cargo ships. The fare of a goods train is more than Rs 25 lakh, in which around 90 containers are loaded at a time. Industry sources say that around 7,000 containers are shipped from Punjab every month.

The Purvanchal region of Uttar Pradesh, famous for Banarasi sarees, has more than a thousand units of carpets, wall hangings, rugs, handicrafts, saris, enamel and wooden toys, whose work is getting affected due to the war in Ukraine. The business of consignment to foreign countries has started declining and orders worth Rs 2000 crore have been stalled. Exports to countries like Britain, Australia, Germany, France, Belgium, Spain etc. are also expected to be affected by the current tense situation in the European region. Handicraft items are sent to these countries, whose orders have come down by 25 per cent. The payment for the goods sent earlier has also been delayed. Textiles and yarn are exported to about 65 countries from Bihlwar in Rajasthan. Poland and Turkey's exports have been affected the most due to the war. Poland's border is adjacent to Russia and Ukraine, where there are situations like lockdown. Traders in Rajasthan are also worried that due to the increase in the price of crude oil, the price of polyester fiber will increase, which will have a negative impact on the textile industry.

Why Indian students go abroad for MBBS: The inadequacy of opportunities at home

Opportunities for medical education in India fall inadequate

According to the Ministry of Health, there were 88,120 undergraduate seats in medical colleges in India as of December 2021. On the other hand, over 15.44 lakh candidates appeared for NEET-UG (National Eligibility cum Entrance Test - Undergraduate) in 2021, an exam which even students who wish to pursue a medical degree abroad are required to clear, in some countries. Around 8.70 lakh candidates cleared the exam last year. This means the number of undergraduate medical seats available (88,120) can only accommodate around 10% of the total qualifying candidates.

Pointing to the magnitude of the gap in demand and availability for MBBS seats in the country, education strategy specialist Ramachandran Krish says, "Even if we assume some of the candidates are writing the exam only out of parental pressure, even if only about 5 lakh candidates truly want to pursue MBBS, that's still a huge shortage," he notes.

The National Medical Commission's website shows 43,310 MBBS seats available in 284 government medical colleges in India, and 41,065 MBBS seats in 269 private medical colleges. This means only about half of the already meager seats are in affordable government colleges. And there's a massive difference in the cost of studying in "small countries", as PM Modi referred to them, when compared to private colleges in India.

Ramachandran says that the cost of the entire MBBS degree in countries like Ukraine and Russia can be as relatively low as one-third of the cost in a private college in India. Speaking to IANS, Omkar Jilla, a third year medical student from Maharashtra studying at the Ivano-

Frankivsk National Medical University in Ukraine, said, "Where we have to spend Rs 10 lakh to Rs 15 lakh per annum in private medical colleges in India, here it costs Rs 3 to Rs 4 lakh only." Moreover, the quality of education at Indian private colleges can also be dubious at times, making students and parents opt for relatively affordable colleges abroad of similar or better quality, says Ramachandran.

On returning to India, students would still have to clear the Foreign Medical Graduates Exam (FMGE) for a license to practice medicine here. FMGE is now proposed to be replaced by the National Exit Test (NExT), an exam which is also likely to become a qualifying final exam for MBBS students who have studied in India, and also possibly replace the NEET-PG exam. In the midst of the Ukraine crisis, Union Parliamentary Affairs Minister Pralhad Joshi claimed that 90% of Indian students who study abroad don't pass India's qualifying examinations, a remark that was heavily criticised by the Progressive Medics and Scientists Forum (PMSF).

PMSF slammed the "insensitive and inappropriate questions" being directed towards students facing the horrors of war in Ukraine, asking them why they go to "small foreign nations" to become doctors instead of studying in India. In a statement issued on March 1, Tuesday, the doctors' forum pointed out: "Limited government MBBS seats and lack of affordable medical education in India forces thousands of MBBS aspirants to seek help from agencies that arrange their admission in medical colleges in eastern Europe, south east Asia and

By: Vijay GarG

Oceania." It also said that these countries, unlike India, have "relatively adequate number of medical universities, most of them entirely public funded," and that they use their additional capacity "to train foreign students on a monetary basis."

Can the private sector fix the shortage?

Speaking after the war on Ukraine commenced, PM Modi had said, "Our children today are going to small countries for study, especially in medical education... Can our private sector not enter this field in a big way? Can our state governments not frame good policies for land allotment regarding this?" Incidentally, the PMSF in its statement said that by finding fault with the choice of students who study medicine abroad, the Government of India "is feigning ignorance from the rampant commercialisation of medical education and health care here in India."

Although more private colleges can help meet the demand for medical education in theory, Paul Chellakumar, Chairman of Chennai-based overseas education consultancy Campus Abroad, notes that in the case of engineering and business education in India, quality of education has become increasingly unreliable with growing privatisation and lack of proper regulation of private colleges. "Managements of private colleges are often not very invested in ensuring quality education, as they run these institutions like a business. With management quota seats being so expensive, many countries including Bangladesh are trying to attract students from India. If the demand leads to rise in private medical colleges, there has to be a proper mechanism for fees and quality regulation. But in India, no one hesitates to pay a capitation fee, which has become very normalised as part of our culture, despite being illegal," Paul notes.

At present, the number of medical colleges is hugely disproportionate across Indian states, with a large number of them concentrated in Karnataka (63 colleges with 9,795 MBBS seats according to NMC), Maharashtra (61 colleges and 9,600 MBBS seats), Tamil Nadu (69 colleges and 10,625 MBBS seats), Telangana and Andhra Pradesh (34 colleges and 5,340 seats; and 31 colleges and 5,210 seats respectively), and Uttar Pradesh (67 colleges and 8,678 seats). In October 2021, NITI Aayog member Dr Vinod K Paul had said that the Indian government aims to achieve the doctor patient ratio of 1:1000 as prescribed by World Health Organisation (WHO) by 2024.

Ramachandran says that if the National Medical Commission (NMC) were to take the scarcity of MBBS seats seriously, in order to provide enough opportunities for every student who aspires to a medical education in India, while also aiming to achieve the required doctor patient ratio in proportion with each state's population, it would at least have to start adding around 30,000 MBBS seats every year if not more for the next few years, and funds would have to be allocated accordingly.

"Alternatives to the existing education system must be considered," Ramachandran says, adding, "The NMC can consider adding a few colleges through a public-private partnership. The government could ask large hospital groups to set up colleges and provide incentives, while keeping the fees affordable."

Russia's financial system takes big hits on Eighth Day of Ukraine War

Banks are crippled, Foreign MNC's Planning shifting of Business

By: Anjan Roy

I never tire of recalling what Joseph Schumpeter, one of the greatest economists and scholars, wrote in his monumental tome: The nearer we are to an epoch the less we understand. Our own we understand the least. It is too early to make an assessment of Russia's Ukraine war and its implications on the country's polity and economy. But already some clues are visible.

At this point of time, what is looking certain in the midst of all other imponderables is that Russia will win the military campaign eventually. But, like in the aftermath of the great war in Mahabharata, will Russia itself survive in its present form. That outcome will decide a lot for the future.

This is begetting the question whether in the twenty-first century it is the old fashioned geo-politics and power play which are the final reckoner or geo-economics will finally overtake it.

The raft of sanctions, which are the weapons of geo-economics of present day, are already biting on Russia and its elites and those who are the ultimate deciders.

The cumulative impact of the sanctions are seeming like having a three-fold implosion. First, these sanctions and restrictions are fundamentally destabilising Russia's macro-economic balance and pushing the economy to the edge of a precipice.

Secondly, personal sanctions on individuals are hitting them personally and their ability to conduct normal business and transactions. They are being outright impoverished, which will have eroded their loyalties and steadfastness to Russian president Putin who has so far been bankrolled by these hugely rich oligarchs.

Thirdly, in view of the sanctions and out of disgust at the brutality of Putin's totally uncalled for war against a far smaller country, big multinational corporations are suddenly withdrawing from Russia. This will have immediate consequences on employment and income creation. Thus, the withdrawal of corporations will have socio-economic impact.

But for now, it is the immediate consequences of the financial sanctions and the fear of a financial crisis which is most pressing.

Some $600 billion of war chest, built by the Russian central bank over years, lies mostly confiscated in the western financial centres as a first measure of the sanctions. Russian banks are out of their international clearing network. Exports of Russia's mainstay of earning, namely, oil and gas, have been put on hold.

Sanctions are crippling the Russian central bank and its ability to what it is supposed to do. The currency is depreciating every day and it has raised the basic policy rate to unsustainably high levels to stem the slide. That has not stopped the rouble's downward drift. Huge volume of funds remain locked up and frozen, not available when these are needed most by its beleaguered banks to keep the internal banking system working.

Banks without funds is like patients snapped of their essential life line. As a consequence, they are also not able to serve their primary roles. Long lines are reported in front of bank offices and people are not able to withdraw their own money. This is the surest way to ruin trust in the banks and financial architecture.

Some of the Russian banks' subsidiaries outside the country have already collapsed. Now a similar development should be expected within the country as well. Bank failures could strike the fear of financial freeze and a total collapse of the system.

The sanctions on institutions and economic entities apart, United States has announced a decision to place sanctions on the Russian president Vladimir Putin and his foreign minister, Dmitry Lavrov. European Union and UK also have decided to follow the same.

Sanctioning a head of state and the foreign minister is a public slap on them and it also means a kind of breaking of diplomatic relations in relations with the head of the government. This will be infamy before the Russian people as well.

Both these leaders would be hit personally since they have reportedly huge amount of wealth much of which are invested globally. Admittedly it would be tremendously difficult to track their ill-gotten wealth and freeze these assets. However, sanctioning them means the search would start for locating their wealth and then confiscating these.

Along with the government heads, the immensely rich Russian oligarchs are already facing the same prospects of losing their amassed wealth around the world. A principal location of these investments has been Britain since the last ten years.

Many of London's most pricey real estate have been bought over by the Russian oligarchs and their children are staying in these properties. They are facing uncertainty and threats in the wake of Russia's war against Ukraine.

Not surprising that some of Russian elites have started making noises and reportedly putting pressures on the Russian state to come seriously to the negotiating tables with the Ukrainians as the economic sanctions have started biting.

The splits are already showing. The Moscow stock exchange has not been reopened this week for fear of a blood bath on the exchange which can cause an imminent financial crash. The central bank is imposing capital controls on transfer of funds out of the country.

Russia can possibly reasonably get some help from China. After all, China has world's largest pot of savings — over $3 trillion. China could bail out with ease. But will it really do that Given the current mood of USA and its western European allies, will China's dealing with Russia also attract sanctions. Two of them together could sustain for a while. However, in their dogged pursuit of punishment for Russia, the western bloc together can punish China as well.

Despite its size and girth, China is typical vulnerable to threats from USA and European Union. Even today, China is dependent on its exports and critical imports. Exports and imports together account for the bulk of its GDP. Hence the threat of effective sanctions could also intimidate China, despite its heft.

A financial collapse, coupled with shooting inflation, sudden unemployment and large scale impoverishment are what autocrats would fear. Combination of these economic issues could be enough of a bomb to unsettle an autocratic regime. What is needed is steadfastness in pursuit of these sanctions.

There is no doubt that even after a successful military win, Putin might have to go unceremoniously and Russia can come unstuck. That will show that geo-economics in the present world could be far more powerful than weapons of mass destruction.

Ukraine's ultimate salvation lies in Russia itself and its people. It will be saved if the Russian people rise in the face of the consequences of an unjust and avoidable war. Not elsewhere. (IPA Service)

Manipur's Naga Hills may decide who wins State Polls this time

Courtesy: NDTV
Ukhrul, March 4:

The second phase of the Manipur elections on Saturday will see a closely watched contest in 11 constituencies in the hilly areas of the state dominated by the Naga tribe.

In the past five years, the BJP has tried a reach out to the region, trying to bridge the gap between the valley areas of the state and the hills which were once the epicentre of bandh and blockades.

The party is now trying to make inroads into the political bastion of its ally the Naga People's Front or NPF and the Congress with their pitch of peace and development over the core issues of the Naga peace deal.

The magnificent hills once used to reverberate with gunshots but now a highway is being built to give Ukhrul much better connectivity to Imphal.

Riding on this development push, the BJP is contesting in all the 11 constituencies in the Naga dominated areas, taking on ally NPF, who are fighting solo, and arch-rival Congress.

At Ukhrul, the BJP has fielded former national footballer Somatai Shaiza. He is trying to win over the Christian-dominated area for the BJP.

"This time the BJP would form a government of its own. So our people also want to be with BJP and part of the government. I thought politics was totally different to football but it is similar. Observe, analyse and execute," said Somatai Shaiza to NDTV.

But the Naga Peoples Front will not let go of its bastion easily. It has raised the delay in the Naga peace talks and the slow development in Naga areas. A former bureaucrat Ram Muivah is its candidate from Ukhrul.

"In Ukhrul there are no proper roads, water, internet and there is a shortage of electricity supply. And for us, the focus even now is the peace agreement and NPF is the only party pushing this agenda," Ram Muivah told NDTV.

The sitting MLA is from Congress but this time their campaign is low-key.

Out of the 11 constituencies in Naga areas, in 2017 the NPF had won four, Congress four, BJP one, and NPP one.

Ukhrul is the home district of armed rebel group NSCN (IM) chief Th Muivah, who has not visited the area for decades, and the peace talk has been stalled on the contentious demands of a separate flag and constitution.

"Every Naga feels bad that our leader Muivah cannot come to Manipur to home at Ukhrul. So for us, Naga issue solution is the key issue," said Chonchui, a resident.

Which way the winds will blow in the Naga hills of Manipur might decide who will form the next government in this multi-corner poll battle. Many say successive state governments have failed to provide the very basic necessities for years.

"It is the moral responsibility of people to provide basic necessities and it should not matter if our MLA is from Congress, BJP or NPF. People should get facilities," said Donny, a young man in Ukhrul.

ISL: ATKMB confirm semi spot for second straight year with victory over Chennaiyin FC

Agency
Bambolim, March 4:

ATK Mohun Bagan rode on their talisman Roy Krishna's first-half strike to sail into the semifinals of the Indian Super League for the second straight year, with a 1-0 victory against Chennaiyin FC here on Thursday.

Krishna netted his fifth goal of the season and first this calendar year in the 45th minute and that proved to be the difference in the end as the green and maroons side moved to second in the standings with 37 points from 19 matches.

They will take on Jamshedpur FC next on March 7 to potentially decide the team that will finish at the top of the table. Jamshedpur have two games in hand and are at the top with 37 points. They take on Odisha FC on Friday.

ATKMB bossed the game from the first minute, bombing the Chennaiyin defence with constant attacks, the latter happy to sit back and try to attack on the counter.

Krishna gave early warnings after a Kauko through ball sent him clear but the veteran Fiji striker, back in the starting XI after an injury layoff, found the post in his way.

There were no clear-cut chances after that early opportunity but the Mariners looked the likelier to score before Chennaiyin started growing into the game and almost kept ATKMB at bay despite all their adventures in the final third.

But just before half time, Kauko provided a similar pass for Krishna who, unlike at the start of the game, slammed home past a diving Samik Mitra in Chennaiyin goal.

Chennaiyin started the second half on the front foot and almost got their reward three minutes into the hour-mark when a Reagan Singh effort deflected off an ATKMB shirt and came off the post.

It was an open half but ATKMB defended well to see off the tie and grab important three points although one point would have been enough to seal their semifinal berth.

Chennaiyin, already out of the play-offs race after a forgettable season, finished their engagements with 20 points from the same number of matches.

As war rages, Winter Paralympics open in Beijing without Russia

Agency
Beijing, March 4:

The 2022 Winter Paralympics open Friday in Beijing, with the Russian athletes sent home and the Ukrainian team escaping a war zone to get here.

"It's a miracle that we have made it to the Paralympics," the head of the Ukrainian delegation, Valerii Sushkevych, told a news conference on the eve of the Games.

Russia's invasion of Ukraine, shortly after the Winter Olympics wrapped up in Beijing, is roiling the world. And the world of sports is no exception.

Paralympics organizers initially announced that Russians and Belarusians would be allowed to compete in Beijing, but reversed course one day before the opening and expelled athletes from both countries. They cited tensions in the Athletes Village.

Sushkevych said it took four days for team members in Ukraine to reach Beijing. He said he slept on the floor of a bus because of a back condition during the last two days of the journey through Europe.

"We overcame a lot of barriers on the way," he said. "Many members of our team had to escape while there was bombardment and shells exploding."

The Paralympics were set to open with a night ceremony at the Bird's Nest National Stadium. Chinese President Xi Jinping and International Paralympic Committee President Andrew Parsons were to attend the opening ceremony. The Games close on March 13.
